

Jobs Asked for Retarded Teens

Industry was asked to help make jobs for retarded teenagers during a panel program which highlighted the February luncheon meeting of the South Bay-Harbor Industry Education Council.

Presenting a panel on "Vocational Education Opportunities for the Educable Mentally Retarded" were three teachers from the South Bay Union High School District. They were: Robert Talican of Aviation High School, Paul Flahive of Mira Costa High School, and Leon Shumaker of Redondo Union High School.

According to Flahive, retarded high school students who are capable of doing limited academic work are no longer "kept off to themselves" in the South Bay Union High School District. Instead, they take some classes geared to their abilities, mingle with the rest of the student body in shop classes, and work part-time.

THE AIM of the program, according to Shumaker, is to "make them proficient window-washers, janitors, and clean-up men." "In addition to giving this type of person a sense of self-worth," he stated, "industry is gaining a trained employee."

"You have at your fingertips a pool of capable workers that is not transient," Talican told the industrialists. "You'll have to either provide for them through the tax rolls or by providing them with jobs. These youngsters can function well in industry at the kind of jobs they are capable of doing."

MODERATOR Dr. Douglas Swartz, administrative assistant for the South Bay Union High School District, stated that 2 to 5 per cent of the population are retarded, brain-damaged, or suffer from cerebral palsy. "These people can do the repetitive jobs that other workers find dead-ly," he stated.

Of 16 recent graduates, 12 are employed today and have good employment records, he stated. They work in car washes, as bus boys in restaurants, and one is employed as a transmission mechanic. "Hiring the handicapped is a growing concept," Swartz concluded.

Youth Takes Field Trip

Willie Sullivan of Torrance, a student at the College of Idaho, joined with other education majors in taking a field trip to Ogden, Utah, for six weeks of on-the-scene training in his chosen field.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Sullivan, 1771 Calamar Ave.
